

Disability Education Resources

Disability is an intersectional, individualized experience, so no list can ever fully capture the experience of being disabled in America. We acknowledge that people are not resources - they are people. We share their writings, scholarship, and lived experience with you here, but they are not objects for our consumption.

Moving toward a more inclusive psychiatry workforce: Authors from Mount Sinai, Brigham and Women's, Spaulding/Harvard, UC Davis, and others, how medicine and particularly the field of PM&R should be doing more to recruit from a more diverse pool of learners and trainees, including students with disabilities:

Evidence from the scientific and academic literature that, given accommodations, learners with differences and disabilities can do quite well and bring a breadth of new and enriching knowledge and perspectives to a field of study (even here at Hopkins):
