

Johns Hopkins Bayview Medical Center

Johns Hopkins Bayview Medical Center is a full-service academic medical center on a 130-acre campus in southeast Baltimore.

As an academic teaching hospital, the Medical Center plays a crucial role in community health, innovation, medical advancements and providing care to diverse populations while integrating research and education into our mission. All the physicians at Johns Hopkins Bayview are full-time faculty at The Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine and offer their expertise through numerous teaching programs, including the residency program in internal medicine. The Medical Center provides a supportive environment that allows housestaff the opportunity to become leaders in primary care, general internal medicine, geriatric medicine and other medical subspecialties. Students from The Johns Hopkins University School of Nursing also come to the Medical Center for hospital-based instruction in acute and long-term care.

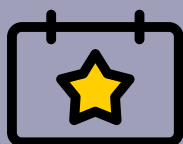

JOHNS HOPKINS
MEDICINE

History

Johns Hopkins Bayview Medical Center has a long, distinguished history of service and medical excellence. It is one of the oldest, continuous health care institutions on the East Coast. From its inception in 1774 as an almshouse, it evolved as an asylum and, eventually, a municipal hospital. In 1984, the city of Baltimore transferred ownership of the hospital to Johns Hopkins. Since then, more than $600 million has been invested to transform and modernize the campus. This development has been coupled with an investment in the faculty, staff and culture that puts the patient, family and community first.

250 Years and Counting

For two and a half centuries, Johns Hopkins Bayview has provided compassionate health care focused on the uniqueness and dignity of each person we serve. With a rich and long tradition of patient care, education and research, we are dedicated to providing and advancing medicine that is respectful and nurturing of the lives of those we touch.
