

Now accepting applications for the Johns Hopkins Otolaryngology Medical Student Research Training Program!

Program Overview: Improving our understanding and treatment of conditions that affect communication and the senses of hearing, balance, taste, and smell benefits from the involvement of clinician-scientists trained in otolaryngology. Our program will provide the research training, communication, and professional skills that will encourage medical students to become creative contributors to the future of otolaryngology and the treatment of associated communication disorders. 2 medical students per year will be recruited for 9 months of research training with stipend. These students will be paired with a mentoring team and can choose from a wide and deep selection of research themes within the department and in associated laboratories at Johns Hopkins.

Participants will engage in hands-on research and complete a curriculum focused on research skill-building and navigating clinician-scientist careers. Our NIH R25-supported medical students will benefit from access to state-of-the-art research facilities, a highly collaborative and diverse research environment, and substantial institutional resources.

Applicant eligibility: Ideally, candidates will enter this program following their 2nd or 3rd years of med school. You must be enrolled in an LCME-accredited medical school and be a United States citizen or Permanent Resident. Our department has long been dedicated to increasing diversity, equity, inclusion, and accessibility in our field. Thus, individuals from historically underrepresented backgrounds in otolaryngology (ethnic, gender, socioeconomic) are encouraged to apply.

Questions? Contact Program Directors Dr. John Carey jcarey@jhmi.edu and Dr. Amanda Lauer alauer2@jhmi.edu. For more information about our department and training programs, please visit <https://www.hopkinsmedicine.org/otolaryngology>.

Applications will be accepted on a rolling basis until the positions are filled, but please apply using the QR code or link below by Feb 1 for priority consideration.
